Dear Mr. Dickson:

On behalf of women's rights, labor, and other human rights organizations, we write to express our deep concerns over the illegal termination of pregnant women and union leaders at Gap Inc.'s supplier Willbes, a factory in Haiti which produces Old Navy clothing.

In July 2024, Willbes fired four pregnant workers and nine leaders of the Sendika Ouvriye Tekstilak Abiman-Batay Ouvriye (SOTA-BO) union. The firings of the pregnant women are a violation of Haitian Labor Code Article 330, which prohibits the dismissal of pregnant employees without prior approval from the Ministry of Labor. The dismissals of the union leaders violate Haiti's Constitution, Labor Code, and the International Labour Organization Conventions 87 and 98 on freedom of association which Haiti has ratified.

Gap Inc. has not taken appropriate action, as required by its own Code of Vendor Conduct and by the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, to remedy these clear violations of women's rights and union rights. According to a report by the Worker Rights Consortium, Gap Inc. has instead defended Willbes's unlawful actions, refusing to require its supplier to take the necessary corrective action in accordance with Haitian law, Gap's own supplier code of conduct, and consistent with international standards.

While we are very disappointed by Gap Inc.'s inaction, it is not too late for Gap Inc. to correct its course. Will Gap Inc. require Willbes, as a condition of its ongoing business relationship, to offer these 13 workers reinstatement and pay them back wages, including maternity benefits owed under Haitian law to the four women who were pregnant at the time they were fired?

We request a public response from Gap Inc.

Sincerely,
